O. F. COMMON SENSE

"I often see the statement in print that children are entitled to happiness. It is a fine sentiment, but children are no more entitled to happiness than adults.

The first duty of parents to children is to bring them up properly, strong, happy and well. It is a strong influence on their future lives. And bringing up children properly necessarily includes some spanking.

I beg parents to better appreciate their duty to bring up children properly, since the worst friends we are compelled to deal with are children "spoiled" by foolish parents.

Often think that every man or woman who makes a fool of himself is "spoiled" as a child. Everyone should be "spoiled" as a child. Everyone should be "spoiled" as a child. Everyone should be "spoiled" as a child.

Soon after the program, Christmas arrived, coming down the chimney, much to the delight of the children. Santa with his assistants, delivered many fine gifts to old and young. Soon the lovely trees so laden with many lovely things stood here. The trees were so pretty, especially the stage setting with small trees lighted with the colored lights provided by Miss Gage. Charles Kimball gladly saw to getting the trees and Marion Hamlin and helpers worked hard on the decorations which were indeed very pretty.

The thaw last week took off a lot of the snow and left the roads and sidewalks very icy when the weather grew cooler. It made the auto slow and skid and one coming around the corner by Gammon & Martin's store, Monday, about noon, struck his gasoline pump and broke it off close to the ground, causing a short circuit in the electric lights at the store which set fire to the gasoline as it poured out and ran down the sidewalk past the store to the next house. The auto was pulled off from it and the chemical engine brought to the rescue and saved the tank from blowing up. It all happened so quickly that there was no time for the fire alarm to be sounded and but few knew of the great danger the village had escaped until afterwards. It was a Gulf gasoline tank and the man driving the offending auto was a traveling insurance agent, by the name of Chapman, from Portland. When told what the damage would be—to pay for a new gas pump—he thought it small beside paying for a whole store if that "gone up" too.
